The beef trust chiefs declared there was no possible chance for any further conciliatory move, and that the packers were now in a position where they could ignore the labor unions, and that they proposed to do so.

The leading incident in the strike in the last twenty-four hours and that which has aroused the greatest bitterness and ill-feeling here, is the action of Police Inspector Nicholas Hunt in arresting President Golden, of the Teamsters' Union, for merely calling from his office window to a passing teamster who was supposed to be carting beef from the packing houses, Golden was not only locked up, but bail was refused for two hours, and he was only released on a promise not to go near labor headquarters until after his hearing.

President Golden immediately ordered him to turn back, but Inspector Hunt stepped out to the curb.

"Pay no attention to that man," he said to the teamster. "Go on about your business. You'll not be disturbed."

A war of words followed between President Golden and the inspector.

Finally Hunt cried out.

"Now, you shut up, or I'll arrest you."
